BREED SNAPSHOT: THE EURASIER

The Eurasier is a medium-sized dog with a thick, medium-long coat that can come in a variety of colors. Confident, calm, and well-balanced, he is loyal to the entire family, but reserved towards strangers. He must live in close contact with his family, as he is not suited to be kept in kennels or tied up outside. The Eurasier comes in a beautiful array of colors. All coat colors are permitted as per the breed standard except for liver color, pure white and irregular white patches. Eurasiers can have purple tongues, pink tongues or spotted tongues. They can also have dark face masks or light, so-called reverse masks. Eurasiers are calm, even-tempered, gentle, loving, intelligent and confident.

History

Julius Wipfel, who resided in Germany, searched to find a successor to his black, Spitz-type dog which was very intelligent and independent. He wished for a dog that would show the adaptability and social behavior of dog's ancestor, the wolf, and a dog that would be a wonderful family pet. Wipfel and other dog enthusiasts started the long journey of trying to develop a family-oriented breed. Strict breeding plans and guided breeding resulted in the first litter of "Wolf-Chow" puppies through the cross-breeding of a Chow Chow and a Wolfspitz. Then, in 1972, a Samoyed was crossed in to introduce its friendly nature and their offspring was named "Eurasier" to reflect the breed's European and Asian heritage. In 1973, the German Kennel Club and the Federation Cynologique International acknowledged the breed. The standard was re-written in 1994..
